

CENTURION WAY

Chichester Conservation Volunteers helped in September 1995 when the path was first established to weed, rake and seed the banks.

In Spring I walk along the Centurion Way to watch and hear the birds and look for wild flowers.

In Summer there are the bee orchids to search for.

In Autumn it's such a good spot for black berrying.

In Winter it's a great path to walk when the rest of the countryside is so muddy. I don't want it to be downgraded to suit the developers.

I love the mature trees alongside the path which support the wildlife. I can walk from the Fishbourne end and access Brandy Hole Copse – would I do this if it ran alongside a busy road? – no.

We use the path for teaching the grand children to cycle - we can get away from the car fumes – why should it be spoilt with a road going alongside?

I can cycle to visit my sister at West Stoke via Centurion Way – only use the path because it is quiet and not disturbed by traffic noise.
